Bailieborough Poor Law Union

Minute Books

The Poor Law system operated in Ireland during the period 1838-1923. Ireland was divided into a number of poor law unions each of which had a workhouse and was overseen by a Board of Guardians. The Board of Guardians met on a weekly basis and it is the minutes of these meetings that are preserved here. Those persons attending meetings are named. Each week, the number of 'inmates' in the workhouse is given and they are categorised according to gender, age, whether able-bodied, aged and infirm, sick and lunatics. Numbers are also given for night lodgers and casuals, and for persons who were discharged or died each week. Boards of Guardians also tendered outdoor relief (that is, outside the workhouse) to several categories of persons. They are described as destitute persons, orphans and deserted children at nurse and deaf and dumb persons in asylums. Relieving Officers were responsible for tendering outdoor relief. Until the passing of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, the functions of Boards of Guardians were funded by the Poor Rate, a tax Guardians were empowered to levy on property owners in their Unions. Minutes often contain abstracts of the rates collected. Because the Poor Rate was an important source of income, the Guardians were protective of it and minutes often contain references to conflicts with rate collectors who did not succeed in collecting all the due rates. Minutes refer to resolutions decided on by the Board of Guardians. Minutes refer to orders for foodstuffs and therefore convey a good impression of diet in the workhouse. Some summaries of reports tendered by the Master of the workhouse to the Board of Guardians are present and might comment on various matters such as the quality of supplies, incidents involving 'inmates' and staff relations. Occasionally, minutes contain summaries of reports by Visiting Committees which visited the workhouse to report on such matters as the welfare of 'inmates.' At the central level, workhouses were under the control of the Poor Law Commissioners until 1872, the Commissioners thereafter being replaced by the Local Government Board. Both of these bodies were in frequent correspondence with the Board of Guardians and minutes contain transcriptions or summaries of correspondence. The format of minutes may change over time, later incorporating financial minutes and statistical minutes in tabular form. In addition to providing directly for the poor, the Board of Guardians accumulated other responsibilities in the areas of public health from the early 1850s, boarding out of children from the early 1860s and rural housing from 1883. Between 1874 and 1899 they were the rural sanitary authority.

In terms of usefulness for genealogical research, these minute books do contain some interesting information. However, they are not indexed and much trawling will be required. 'Inmates' are sometimes named but it tends to be the exception and in connection with incidents that are out of the ordinary, for example, if there was a disciplinary issue or if they were in receipt of medical treatment from an external institution. It should be noted that no registers of workhouse 'inmates' or those to whom outdoor relief was tendered are extant for Bailieborough Poor Law Union. Staff and officers of the workhouses are often named and the names of Guardians who attended the weekly meetings are supplied. Minutes also name business persons who supplied goods and services to the Union.

'Inmates' are sometimes named but it tends to be the exception and in connection with incidents that are out of the ordinary, for example, in relation to disciplinary issues or if they were in receipt of medical treatment from an external institution. It should be noted that no registers of workhouse 'inmates' or those to whom outdoor relief was tendered are extant for this poor law union. Staff and officers of the workhouses are often named and the names of Guardians who attended the weekly meetings are supplied. Minutes will also name business persons who supplied goods and services to the Union.

Numbers were placed on these volumes at some time in the past, probably not contemporaneously with use. They are given below as 'Recorded number' in the list below. The volume number 58 under this system is a Rough Minute Book and consequently, it has been separated from official Minute Books. Two of the Minute Books, number 77 and 87 are out of date sequence, and have been placed in the correct chronological order. In some cases, there are overlaps in the dates of minutes recorded in the volumes listed below. This may be accounted for by the fact that minutes are recorded in more than one volume. On the other hand, in some cases, minutes of the Board of Guardians may not be present for the dates given below. In such instances, the minute books often record that a quorum of Board members did not attend for meetings. Despite this, the date of the intended Board meetings are recorded here as some information relating to the business of the Union is usually recorded, for example, financial minutes.

Cavan Poor Law Union

Minute Books

The Poor Law system operated in Ireland during the period 1838-1923. Ireland was divided into a number of poor law unions each of which had a workhouse and was overseen by a Board of Guardians. The Board of Guardians met on a weekly basis and it is the minutes of these meetings that are preserved here. Each week, the number of 'inmates' in the workhouse is given and they are categorised according to gender, age, whether able-bodied, aged and infirm, sick and lunatics. Numbers are also given for night lodgers and casuals, and for persons who were discharged or died each week. Boards of Guardians also tendered outdoor relief (that is, outside the workhouse) to several categories of persons. They are described as destitute persons, orphans and deserted children at nurse and deaf and dumb persons in asylums. Relieving Officers were responsible for tendering outdoor relief. Until the passing of the Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898, the functions of Boards of Guardians were funded by the Poor Rate, a tax Guardians were empowered to levy on property owners in their Unions. Minutes often contain abstracts of the rates collected. Because the Poor Rate was an important source of income, the Guardians were protective of it and minutes often contain references to conflicts with rate collectors who did not succeed in collecting all the due rates. Minutes refer to resolutions decided on by the Board of Guardians. Minutes refer to orders for foodstuffs and therefore convey a good impression of diet in the workhouse. Some summaries of reports tendered by the Master of the workhouse to the Board of Guardians are present and might comment on various matters such as the quality of supplies, incidents involving 'inmates' and staff relations. Occasionally, minutes contain summaries of reports by Visiting Committees which visited the workhouse to report on such matters as the welfare of 'inmates.' At the central level, workhouses were under the control of the Poor Law Commissioners until 1872, the Commissioners thereafter being replaced by the Local Government Board. Both of these bodies were in frequent correspondence with the Board of Guardians and minutes contain transcriptions or summaries of correspondence. The format of minutes may change over time, later incorporating financial minutes and statistical minutes in tabular form. In addition to providing directly for the poor, the Board of Guardians accumulated other responsibilities in the areas of public health from the early 1850s, boarding out of children from the early 1860s and rural housing from 1883. Between 1874 and 1899 they were the rural sanitary authority.

In terms of usefulness for genealogical research, these minute books do contain some interesting information. However, they are not indexed and much trawling will be required. 'Inmates' are sometimes named but it tends to be the exception and in connection with incidents that are out of the ordinary, for example, in relation to disciplinary matters or if they were in receipt of medical treatment from an external institution. Staff and officers of the workhouses are often named and the names of Guardians who attended the weekly meetings are supplied.

Minutes will also name business persons who supplied goods and services to the Union.

There may be two minute books for a given set of dates below. It is likely that one is a rough minute book and the other is the official copies but for some volumes there is no indication which is which. In such cases, both are listed with official minute books.

Cootehill Poor Law Union

Minute Books

The Poor Law system operated in Ireland during the period 1838-1923. Ireland was divided into a number of poor law unions each of which had a workhouse and was overseen by a Board of Guardians. The Board of Guardians met on a weekly basis and it is the minutes of these meetings that are preserved here. Those persons attending meetings are named. Between 1874 and 1899 they were the rural sanitary authority.

In terms of usefulness for genealogical research, these minute books do contain some interesting information. However, they are not indexed and much trawling will be required. 'Inmates' are sometimes named but it tends to be the exception and in connection with incidents that are out of the ordinary. It should be noted that no registers of workhouse 'inmates' or those to whom outdoor relief was tendered are extant. Staff and officers of the workhouses are often named and the names of Guardians who attended the weekly meetings are supplied.

Minutes will also name business persons who supplied goods and services to the Union.
